To Destroy Ants.

Ants that frequent houses or gardens may be destroyed by flour of brimstone (half a pound) and potash (four ounces). Put in an iron or earthen dish over the fire until dissolved and united. Afterward beat to a powder and infuse a little of this powder in water and wherever you sprinkle it the ants will fly the place.

CONDENSERY PLANT IS NOT TO LOCATE WITHIN THE STATE

Dundee, Ill., Company Which Had Prospects of Coming Here Gives Up Idea According to Letter.

For some time past the Janesville Commercial club has been endeavoring to secure the plant of the Oatman Condensed Milk company of Dundee, Ill. Members of the Oatman concern visited Janesville, called on Secretary W. J. McDowell of the Commercial club and asked him what this organization could offer as to building site and guarantee of milk for daily use of the plant.

After taking the matter up with the board of club directors it was decided that the plant would be a good addition to the city's industrial family and accordingly Secretary McDowell set about to bring the plant here.

He made a special trip to Chicago and called on Northwestern railway officials and secured the site of the plant. He also secured a small building at a nominal annual rental providing the company decided to locate. The company wanted a site on the railway, as much of their product is for outside shipment. In addition to securing the site Mr. McDowell found even more than enough farmers in the vicinity of the city ready to sell their milk to the condenser. It was necessary, Oatman representatives said, that Janesville guarantee sufficient milk daily for the use of the plant before the directors would consent to come here.

Prospects seemed bright until the following letter was received by the Commercial club on Dec. 23:

"Your letter of the 21st received, and while we have not definitely decided on a location, I think it only fair to tell you that it is very doubtful if we will locate at Janesville.

"The advantages of locating in a smaller town where the community required a smaller amount for home consumption and getting farther from the active competition would operate against Janesville or any town of similar size.

"Your interest and co-operation are highly appreciated and I wish to thank you for your efforts in our behalf.

The correspondence was signed by W. P. Oatman president of the milk company.

The letter itself was explanatory, but even this did not abash the Commercial club in its endeavor to bring the Oatman company to the city. Accordingly a committee of interested parties arranged with members of the company charging its plants but these proved fruitless. Further interviews with Mr. Oatman indicate that he will not locate a condensing plant in Wisconsin this year.

RESENT HIGH TAXES IN COPPER COUNTRY

ATTITUDE IS REALLY AT BASIS OF THREATENED FORMATION OF A NEW STATE.

FINANCIAL PROSPECTS

Conservative Financiers Are Not Disposed to Exaggerate Apparently Prosperous Outlook.

(By Ellis B. Usher.)

Milwaukee, Jan. 8.—Some account of the propaganda to form the upper peninsula of Michigan as a new and separate state, to be called Superior, has appeared in the local papers this week. Statistical reasons were advanced for the score for the change. It seems to me that the real cause for such a move, if there is any, will be found not in the fact that "the Peninsula is thirteen times as large as Rhode Island," etc., but in another direction entirely. At any rate, the move will arouse a division of sentiment on one point in the sovereign state of Michigan that will not be easily healed.

I refer to the tax issue. Regardless of right or justice (and note, I do not say which party is right and which wrong), Southern Michigan will be up in arms against this movement. They will talk of lack of loyalty, of the glories of old Michigan and the great future that awaits the state. They will talk of taxes.

But the high assessed value of the Upper Peninsula, which is said to pay one-seventh of the taxes of the state, which boasts the riches of P. O. B. Detroit, and other productive communities, will be the underlying and deepest objection to a division of the great state.

Minnesota's Situation.
Minnesota, where there is no talk of a division, has a more exaggerated situation. One part of the state (that where the iron ore lies) pays practically all the taxes of the rest, which, thanks to this never ending source of revenue, has no state debt. The Southern part of the state is jealous of the northern, but it would never consent to lose the revenue gained from the mineral taxes.

Copper taxes will keep the Upper Peninsula a part of Michigan. Geographically, perhaps, that great point to the north of us should be a part of Wisconsin or a separate state. Its regional bank under the Federal Reserve Banking Act is in Minneapolis, which indicates that the men who formed the zones had some such idea.

This agitation that a separate state be made of the Upper Peninsula or Michigan is not new. It has never come to a head, however. If it does so this time, the tax question will be one that will dim all other issues. Leading the wealth of Michigan that lies outside the Peninsula, that state will add zealously to her northern demands from whence comes a princely sum of contribution to her exchequer. And remember, please, that on a basis of popular vote. Southern Michigan outnumbered its northern half considerably. There would be little consideration for the northern viewpoint if the voters of Southern Michigan felt their taxes were to be raised by its secession.

Financial Prospects.
The summaries of the year 1915 in financial and commercial lines have lately reflected a great many uneven or as the financiers are pleased to term them, "spotty" conditions.

This is illustrated in a very striking manner by the fact that although Milwaukee's postal receipts were somewhat lower than in the previous year, they showed a substantial increase in 1915, while the postal receipts of Chicago showed a decrease of something like $140,000. These conditions are reflected in every community, as they are in every community.

Certain industries have prospered upon European demand. Others have suffered, and while the banks have shown large increase in the accumulation of funds, there is a corresponding increase in loans and advances, which are the measure of commercial activity. When money is loaned to the business men, it is being used, and is productive. I notice that one of the larger financiers of the country, like Mr. Foran of Chicago, talk on a much more conservative key than some of the smaller financiers of the country. They are careful to put saving clauses into their statements, and I notice that Mr. Foran especially referred constantly to the fact that the state banks of the country ought to come in to the reserve building system in order to make that a success. On the whole, the year 1915 found the United States greatly depressed in its industries, and the end of the year showed a somewhat general and more assuring condition. Probably the most significant of all the facts tending to suggest business revival is that the railroads have been increasing their earnings with a prospect that they will also increase their orders for cars and other equipment. The offset that will to some considerable extent neutralize this marked upward tendency is the increasing cost of labor and materials. The American people will do well to shut their eyes and realize that high prices in war time mean prosperity only to those who are extremely prudent and hold on to everything they can.

An Educational Discussion.
Last week I was a business guest in a party of gentlemen when the subject turned to education. A man who had been a State Senator at the time the first large appropriation was made for the Illinois State University, and who is now a lawyer of prominence in a neighboring state, propounded the rather surprising doctrine that, given his way, he would abolish all private institutions of learning, and compel those who got education at all, to get it in the public schools and state universities. His enthusiasm over the University of Illinois and its achievements was not marred by any knowledge that there was a greater than his in the neighboring state of Wisconsin, and I wondered if he also reflected his as yet unspoken ambitions. This doctrine of universal and exclusive public education did not go unchallenged. Another lawyer in the party, who still lives in Illinois, took a shot, and said that he regarded the tendencies toward broad public assistance in education as one of the bad tendencies of the time. From his point of view, the boy or girl or the man or woman who got too much for nothing, valued it little. I was mere visitor and a listener at the table when these two extremes of the educational problem provoked a very animated discussion and I was greatly impressed with the wide difference between the two propositions. Both men were middle-aged men, not much, if any, over forty years old, so that neither was expressing the ideas of an effete past. If I should have added to the discussion, I of the gentleman who was opposed to unlimited and universal state domination of education, the further argument that all the tendencies in that direction are toward teaching too few of them thoroughly and well.

A Glimpse at Politics.
In the smoking room of the Pullman car the other day, I encountered a very bright and intelligent young man from Galveston, Texas, with whom I fell into conversation. He turned the talk along political lines by saying that Mr. Bryan in his opinion had been losing strength in the South for some years. He felt, too, that the manner of Mr. Bryan's retirement from the cabinet was such an affront to the administration and the party, as well as to the country, that many of his former friends were most deeply wounded by it. He had heard one of Mr. Bryan's peace lectures since his retirement, and summed it up by saying that Mr. Bryan merely made verbal flower pots bloom to wither in one's presence. He summed up his opinion of him by calling him shallow. But the thing that struck me as significant in this young man was his statement that the young men of the South who were getting into business activities that took them about the country were inclined to depart from the old custom of voting just as their fathers had always done before them. He seemed to be sympathetic toward the President, but when the name of Roosevelt was mentioned, he remarked: "Don't think he has left the public field. He has a host of followers all over the country." While he did not say so, it was evident that Roosevelt's militant attitude was attractive, and while I think he would vote for Wilson in a very small thing, might turn him to "Teddy," if he happened to be the opposing candidate. He seemed to think that the Republicans were in such condition that it would be difficult for them to unite on any one else. I am not going to attempt to draw any moral from a single incident of this kind, I merely mention it because it seems to me highly significant and not unlikely to be very important. If any large number of young men in the country are feeling as this young man from Texas does, Mr. Wilson's war horse will have to prance some to carry him to victory.

New Gridiron Coaches.
One of the Sporting Editor's post football season joys is picking new gridiron coaches for the various colleges whose seasons have not been entirely successful. He remarked: "I hate to fall in with such folly, but I must say I am impressed with the pressure brought to bear on Harry L. Williams of Minnesota, to come to the aid of his alma mater, Yale. Yale needs a real coach. Now that the titanic Tom Shevlin has come to an untimely and deeply mourned end, Yale football must look forward to a number of seasons of disaster and gloom. His heroic mold will never again rouse them to gigantic effort. So Dr. Williams, whose employment Shevlin heartily advocated a few days before his death has been picked as the logical football coach for Yale next season.

Somehow, Yale usually gets what she wants in the end. If Yale wants Williams badly enough, he'll be there next fall.

Milwaukee has been mildly interested in the efforts of St. Thomas College (St. Paul, Minn.) to get Jack Ryan of this city as a coach. Many have asked, who is he? Mr. Ryan was captain of the Dartmouth eleven in the fall of 1915. He graduated there the succeeding spring. He came to St. Thomas and turned out three winning teams in a row. He is now travelling out of this city for a Minneapolis milling concern.

The former Dartmouth captain knows the game. He is keen enough to preserve his individuality and yet can adopt good ideas from others to his own benefit. If he is open for a coaching job, he is more able than many who have been suggested for coach at Wisconsin.

Bonds Replace Notes.

(Advertisement.)
The most significant achievement of the Erie railroad toward full fellowship with the big trunk lines of the country was taken just as last year closed. It was the flotation through J. P. Morgan & Co. of approximately twenty million dollars of 4 per cent 50 year gold bonds. This issue will wipe out something like fifteen millions of the company's twenty millions of floating debt and the margin will be used for some specific and necessary improvements. The New York Times in speaking of this forward step says:

"The increased earnings of the Erie and the enhanced credits of the road now make it possible to eliminate objectionable and expensive financing by short-term notes. In using long-term bonds to refund short-term notes the Erie is taking an important step in effecting financial readjustment."

The Wall Street Journal says that the gross business of the road for the year 1915 will exceed $67,000,000 and the net over $20,000,000. With these earnings, and the floating debt extinguished, a dividend in 1917 looks promising, according to the eastern financial writers.

Among the Erie appointments made at the December meeting of the Board of Directors was that of Franklin G. Robbins as general superintendent of the Erie lines centering at Buffalo. He is a La Crosse man by birth and grew up to young manhood there.

AMBASSADOR GERARD PROVES TO BE A CRACK HUNTSMAN
(SPECIAL TO THE GAZETTE.)
Berlin, Jan. 8.—Out hunting today with the American Military Attache in Berlin, Colonel Kuhn, Ambassador Gerard killed two small deer with one shot. The Colonel, on the other hand, fired two shots without hitting a deer!

Did Gerard's friends not know that he was an expert crack-shooter-miss aim rifleman, they would think that time this winter that Gerard killed two deer with one shot. Today it happened thus:

Gerard and the Colonel went out to the Ambassador's game preserve near Berlin. Two small deer appeared. Gerard fired at one. The bullet went through its heart, struck a rib, glided out the side and went through the second deer! More game appeared and the officer took a shot and another shot, but the deer disappeared.

On their way home Gerard declared he would like to bag a duck for dinner because Mrs. Gerard's mother is visiting here and likes duck. It was dark. The Ambassador spotted one, fired and bagged it. But when he got home it was too old to eat.

"That's what I got for shooting ducks at night," remarked Gerard smilingly when he reached the Embassy.

to 1000 cars per day.

So again we have broken all records.
Again we have planned and bought material for a bigger production program.

And again we are setting a new and supreme standard of value—

You can now buy the big, roomy, comfortable, thirty-five horsepower
Overland for $695.

Here is the value which has clearly dominated the automobile market for the last six months—now made even more clearly dominant.

Here is the car with a performance record never even approached by any car of its size ever built—fifty thousand in every day service.

And though the price is reduced the car is improved.

It has an up-to-the-minute power plant, en bloc type, developing full thirty-five horsepower. It has abundant power and speed and an exceptionally quick get-away.

The value is pre-eminent—un-approached.

We guarantee that the price for this model will never be lower.

But this price reduction is made in the face of a rising material market—we cannot guarantee that it will not be higher.

See the Overland dealer now—anticipate your requirement if need be —but make sure of your delivery now.

Spread Of Pan-Americanism Favored By Senator Burton

By Theodore E. Burton.

The present European war has aroused in the United States a strong feeling of interest in the South American countries. The war abroad has shown that we of the western continent possess common interests quite apart from those of Europe, and these will tend to draw us much closer to those other nations of this hemisphere whose aims and ambitions are so much akin to our own. Last summer I spent several months in a tour of South America in an effort to learn more of those countries, to become better acquainted with their people, and to promote as best I could better relations between us.

In spite of these ties which should bind the nations of South America to the United States, the fact remains that in the past century there have Aires, the metropolis of Argentina, has a population of two million people, and is as large for example, as Chicago. It compares in brilliancy and splendor with Vienna and Brussels, and even with Paris. When I was in the streets of that city, indeed, it has no slums. The Buenos Aires Opera House is a marvel of architecture and the greatest opera singers of Europe have before we heard them in New York City. Its hotel rival any to be found in the United States, and it has a club of a membership of two thousand, in which the initiation fee is $1500 in gold. It has also a subway system, equal, if not superior to that of New York City.

The people of South America are extremely attractive. Their hospital-

Temperance Talks

By Temperance Educational League. Statement of General Frederick D. Grant.

There has been considerable comment upon the participation by General Frederick D. Grant recently in the Prohibition parade in Chicago. There were some who thought his action in that respect improper, but the distinguished general is not afraid of criticism and neither is he afraid to assert his convictions. We have before us his statement upon the subject of alcoholism, which is in part as follows:

"Because I know that strong drink has been the cause of untold misery to individuals, to families, and to communities, I believe that prohibition would be of inestimable benefit to this country and to the world. I am convinced that its honest enforcement would solve many of the social problems of the land."

"I have favored the cause of prohibition all my life. Not that I have always been a total abstainer, for I have not been, although I am one now, but I have believed consistently that the liquor traffic was a source of evil. As my belief was strengthened I decided that the cause demanded more than passive acknowledgment of the truth. So I am an out-and-out prohibitionist."

The Temperance Educational League is glad to know that General Grant has made this clear and concise statement of his opinion upon this important subject. It frequently requires more heroism to face a popular wrong than it does to face a cannon's mouth, but General Grant has courage enough to confront both. Nothing in his whole life does him more credit than this declaration in which he has proved himself to be the brave son of a brave father.

been many misunderstandings, due to differences in race, traditions and language, ascribable also to that distrust which smaller countries always feel toward a larger and more powerful nation, situated in geographical proximity. The worst obstacle, however, has been the fact that the people North and South America have not properly understood each other.

Latin Americans A Remarkable People.

We of the United States are essentially ignorant of the conditions and the people south of the Canal Zone. We do not realize what a remarkable people they are. They on the other hand have always cherished a grave fear of what they have sometimes called the North American Peril. They have not understood correctly our attitude with reference to the Monroe Doctrine, and have felt that under its provisions we were seeking to exercise a suzerainty or overlordship over them. Fortunately, however, they have come gradually to realize that we have no such ambition. That suspicion has disappeared and the South American nations are now willing to cooperate with us.

There are sentimental and practical reasons why we should be bound in closer harmony with them. We both belong to the same America. We are working out the same destiny, and solving the same problems of popular government. Our country was the first to recognize their independence when they were struggling for freedom from Spain. Today they need our capital and our assistance for their economic development. We need their products of raw materials, and they need our manufactured articles. The people of the United States do not realize, even vaguely, what a wonderful group of nations comprise South America, and how advanced and prosperous are the people. Buenos ity and kindness are proverbial. They are progressive and ambitious. Even the richest people have large families of children, frequently as many as ten, and they have no sympathy with our ideas of race suicide. In Argentina voting is compulsory and any one who fails to cast his ballot is punished by a fine. South American constitutions are based upon that of the United States, and some of them may be said to be an improvement from our own. Contrary to the general belief, the greatest danger I experienced on my long trip in South America was not from wild animals, or from pestilential diseases, or from bullets, but from the reckless manner in which they handled automobiles. They have no speed limits.

In the United States we are of the opinion that South America is being widely colonized by Germany. As a matter of fact, most South American immigrants are Spanish and Italian. Very few Americans have emigrated to those countries, and this, in itself, explains in large measure, the reason why we are so unfamiliar with the conditions which prevail there. In Buenos Aires for example, there are forty thousand English, thirty-five thousand Germans, thirty thousand French and only four hundred Americans. It is not remarkable therefore, that we have made very little progress in developing trade with South American countries.

EDGERTON POST OFFICE SHOWS A SUBSTANTIAL GAIN.

(SPECIAL TO THE GAZETTE.)

Edgerton, Jan. 8.—Under the management of Postmaster Hoen, the local post office shows a substantial gain for the past year. The sale of stamps, postal cards, and stamped envelopes show an increase of ten per cent over the sales of last year and the business in every other branch of the office has increased accordingly. The system now in vogue at the post-office reflects credit upon the postmaster and the way that the mails are so promptly handled during the rush of business at Christmas time shows beyond a doubt the ability of our postal force. Most of our rural routes are now handled with automobiles, which gives the farmer the best of service.

SHE'S SPEED DEMON AT THE AUTO RACES

Miss Frances Thornton.

Miss Frances Thornton, popularly called "Bunny," is a remarkable young woman racing driver who sprang into prominence a few months ago through her sensational driving of speed cars on mile dirt tracks.

Chalmers builds—I sell—you buy, not merely for today, but for tomorrow.

When I sell you a Chalmers car, I am looking into the many tomorrows that stretch ahead.

The struggle of motor engineering does not end with the production of speed, power, safety, comfort, beauty.

It is a battle with time itself.

Just how many years the Six-30 3400 r. p. m. Chalmers I am selling today for $1050 will stand up and obey your bidding, I don't know; Hugh Chalmers doesn't know. Nobody knows.

Time has not yet set an age limit upon this magnificent power beast.

The first Chalmers 30 was born back in 1909—seven years ago. And "Old Reliable," the first Chalmers 30 built, is still rolling up the mileage after over 300,000 miles of hardest road service. The new Six-30 Chalmers with 3400 r. p. m. engine is a direct descendant of "Old Reliable."

But it is a greater and better car than its forefather. Into it has been bred and built a compact summary of motor eugenics.

This car delivers 45 H.P. at the former cost of 20 to 25 H.P. It gets twice the mileage per gallon of gasoline that many of its contemporaries get.

Here is high speed, high power, high mileage, along with amazing fuel-thrift.

Engineering has taken a new, sharp turn. And Chalmers leads in wringing high speed and power from an engine without sacrifice of operating economy.

The great 3400 r. p. m. engine is an insurance policy against the rising trend of gasoline prices.

The engine strength is reflected in its car strength—it meets the shocks of hardest usage without faltering or complaint. Every gram of material is selected from the raw with always an eye to its lasting qualities. An army of 228 inspectors watch over every detail of construction.

Chalmers cars are riveted to the future with all the skill known to science.

Like Tiffany, like Steinway, Hugh Chalmers lashes his product securely to the requirements of tomorrow.

DOINGS OF THE VAN LOONS—No, Truly, It's Hard to Beat the Game—

BY F. LEIPZIGER

The Lone Wolf

By LOUIS JOSEPH VANCE

(Copyright, by Louis Joseph Vance.)

On retiring Bourke would empty his pockets upon the dressing table, where the boy, Marcel, bringing up Bourke's petit déjeuner the next morning, would see displayed a tempting confusion of gold and silver and copper, with a wad of banknotes, and the customary assortment of personal hardware.

Now inasmuch as Bourke was never wide awake at that hour, and always, after acknowledging Marcel's "bonjour," rolled over and snored for glory and the saints, it was against human nature to resist the lure of that dressing table. Marcel seldom departed without a coin or two.

He had yet to learn that Bourke's habits were those of an Englishman, who never goes to bed without leaving all his pocket money in plain sight and—carefully catalogued in his memory.

One morning in the spring of 1904 Marcel served Bourke his last breakfast at Troyon's.

The Irishman had been on the prow the previous night, and his rasping snore was audible even through the closed door when Marcel knocked and, receiving no answer, used the pass-key and entered.

At this the snore was briefly interrupted. Bourke, visible at first only as a flaming shock of hair protruding from the bedclothes, squirmed an eye above his artificial horizon, opened it, mumbled a halfhearted acknowledgment of Marcel's salutation, and passed blantly into further slumbers.

Marcel deposited his tray on a table beside the bed, then moved quietly to the windows, closed them, and drew the lace curtains together. The dressing table between the two windows displayed, amid the silver and copper, more gold coins than it commonly did—some eighteen or twenty louis altogether. Adroitly abstracting in passing a piece of ten francs, Marcel went on his way rejoicing, touched a match to the fire ready laid in the grate, and was hearing the door when, casting one casual parting glance at the bed, he became aware of a notable phenomenon—the snoring was going on lustily, but Bourke was watching him with both eyes wide and filled with interest.

came to Paris after some notable burglary had been committed in London; and if one troubled to follow monsieur by night, as Marcel had, it became evident that monsieur's first calls in Paris were invariably made at the establishment of a famous fence in the Rue des Trois Freres; and, finally, one drew one's own conclusions when strangers dining in the restaurant—as on the night before, by way of illustration—strangers who were all the hallmarks of police detectives from England, catechized one about a person whose description was the portrait of Bourke, and promised a hundred-franc note for information concerning the habits and whereabouts of that person, if seen.

Marcel added, while Bourke gasped for breath, that the gentleman in question had spoken to him alone, in the absence of other waiters, and had been fobbed off with a lie.

But why—Bourke wanted to know—had Marcel lied to save him, when the truth would have earned him a hundred francs?

"Because," Marcel explained coolly, "I, too, am a thief. Monsieur will perceive it was a matter of professional honor."

Now the Irish have their faults, but ingratitude is not of their number. Bourke, packing hastily to leave Paris, France and Europe by the first feasible route, still found time to question Marcel briefly, and what he learned from the boy about his antecedents so worked with gratitude upon the Irishman's sentimental nature that when, on the third day following, the Cunder Carruth left Naples for New York, she carried among her first-class passengers not only a gentleman whose brilliant black hair and glowing pink complexion rendered him a bit too conspicuous for his own comfort, but also, in the second cabin, his valet, a boy of sixteen who looked eighteen.

The gentleman's name on the passenger list didn't, of course, in the least resemble Bourke. His valet's was given as Michael Lanyard.

The origin of this name is obscure; Michael, being easily corrupted into good Irish Mickey, may safely be attributed to Bourke; Lanyard has a tang of the sea which suggests a reminiscence of some sea tale prized by the pseudo Marcel Troyon.

In New York began the second stage in the education of a professional criminal. The boy would have searched far to find a preceptor of more sound attainments than Bourke. It is, however, only fair to say that Bourke would have looked far for an after pupil.

Under his tutelage Michael Lanyard learned many things; he became a mathematician of considerable promise, an expert mechanic, a connoisseur of armor plate and explosives in their more pacific applications, and he learned to grade precious stones with a glance. Also, because Bourke was born of gentlefolk, he learned to speak English and what clothes to wear and when to wear them, as well as the cultivated use of knife and fork at table; and because Bourke was a diplomatist doomed to blush unseen, he acquired the knack of being at ease in every grade of society—he came to know that a self-made millionaire, taken the right way, is as approachable as one whose millions date back even unto the third generation; he could order a dinner at Sherry's as readily as drinks at Sharkey's. Most valuable accomplishment of all, he learned to laugh.

By way of by-products he picked up a working acquaintance with American, English and German slang—French slang he already knew as a mother tongue—considerable geographical knowledge of the capitals of Europe, America and Illinois, a taste, that discriminated between tobacco and the stuff sold as such in France, and a genuine passion for fine paintings.

Finally Bourke drilled into his apprentice the three cardinal principles of successful cracksmanship—to know his ground thoroughly before venturing upon it; to strike and retreat with the swift precision of a hawk; to be friendless.

And God only knows what'll follow in. "If ever you find you've fallen in love and can't fall out, out the game on the instant, or you'll end wearing stripes or broad arrows—the same as myself would, if this cursed cough wasn't going to be the death of me. No, m'lad, take a fool's advice (you'll never get better) and when you're shot of me, which will be soon, I'm thinking, take the lonesome road and stick to the middle of it. 'He travels the fastest who travels alone' is a true saying, but 'tis only half the truth: he travels the farthest into the bargain. Yet the lonesome road has its drawbacks, lad—it's damned lonely!"

Bourke died in Switzerland of consumption, in the winter of 1910—Lanyard at his side till the end.

Then the boy set his face against the world—alone, lonely and remembering.

CHAPTER II.

Return.

His return to Troyon's, although an enterprise which Lanyard had been contemplating for several years, ever since the death of Bourke, came to pass at length almost purely as an affair of impulse.

He had come through from London by the afternoon service—via Boulogne—traveling light, with nothing but a brace of handbags and his life in his hands. Two coups to his credit since the previous midnight had made the shift advisable, though only one of them, the later, rendered it urgent.

Scotland Yard would, he reckoned, require at least twenty-four hours to unlimber for action on the Ombre affair; but the other, the disappearance of the Huysman plans, although not consummated before noon, must have set the chancelleries of at least three powers by the ears before Lanyard was fairly entrained at Charing Cross.

Now his opinion of Scotland Yard was low; its emissaries must operate gingerly to keep within the laws they serve. But the agents of the various continental secret services have a way of making their own laws as they go along—and for these Lanyard entertained a respect little short of profound.

He would not have been surprised had he run foul of trouble on the pier at Folkestone. Boulogne, as well, figured in his imagination as a crucial point—its harbor lights, heaving up over the grim, gray waste, peered through the deepening violet dusk to find him on the packet's deck, responding to their curious stare with one no less insistently inquiring. But it wasn't until he reached the Gare du Nord itself that he found anything to shy at.

Dropping from train to platform, he surrendered his luggage to a ready factor and followed the fellow through the crush, elbow and shoulder, offended by the pervasive reek of chilled steam and coal gas and dazzled by the brilliant glare of the overhanging electric arcs.

Almost the first face he saw turned his way was that of Roddy.

The man from Scotland Yard was stationed at one side of the platform gates. Opposite him stood another decorative official from the prefecture de police. Both were scanning narrowly every face in the tide that churned between them.

Wondering if through some fatal freak of fortune these were acting under late telegraphic advices from London, Lanyard held himself well in hand. The first indication of an intent to hinder him would have proved the signal for a spectacular demonstration of the ungentle art of not getting caught with the goods.

And for twenty seconds, while the crowd milled slowly through the narrow exit, he was as near to betraying himself as he had ever been—nearer, for he had marked down the point on Roddy's jaw where his first blow would fall and just where to plant a coup de savate most surely to incapacitate the minion of the prefecture; and all the while he was looking the two over with a manner of the most calm and impersonal curiosity.

But beyond an almost imperceptible narrowing of Roddy's eyes when they met his own, as if the Englishman were struggling with a faulty memory, neither police agent betrayed a sign of recognition.

And then Lanyard was outside the station, his porter introducing him to a ramshackle taxicab.

"Troyon's!" he told the cocher.

Lanyard composed his features to immobility as he entered the hotel, of no mind to let the least flicker of recognition be detected in his eyes when they should encounter familiar faces. And this was quite as well—for again the first he saw was Roddy's! The man from Scotland Yard had just surrendered hat, coat and umbrella to the porter in the lobby, and was turning through swinging doors to the dining room. Again taking in Lanyard, his glance seemed devoid of any sort of intelligible expression; and before quitting the lobby Roddy paused long enough to order a fire laid in his room.

So he was stopping at Troyon's—and didn't care who knew it!

His doubts altogether dissipated by this discovery, Lanyard followed his natural enemy into the dining room with an air as devil-may-care as one could wish and so impressive that the maitre d'hotel abandoned the detective to the mercies of one of his captains and himself hastened to seat Lanyard and take his order.

This last disposed of, Lanyard surrendered himself to new impressions—of which the first proved a bit disheartening.

However impulsively, he hadn't sought Troyon's without definite intent, to wit, to gain some clue, however slender, to the mystery of that wretched child, Marcel. But now it appeared he had procrastinated fatally—time and change had left little other than the shell of the Troyon's he remembered. Papa Troyon was gone; Madame no longer occupied the desk of the cuisine; inquiries, so discreetly worded as to be uncomplaining, elicited from the maitre d'hotel the information that the house had been under new management these eighteen months; the old proprietor was dead, and his widow had sold out lock, stock and barrel, and retired to the country. It was not known exactly where. And with the new administration had come fresh decorations and furnishings and a complete change of personnel—not even one of the old waiters remained.

"The Lone Wolf? Who is That?"

"All are gone, the old, familiar faces!" Lanyard quoted in vindictive melancholy—"damn 'em!"

"What a lovely skating costume!" I thought you said your husband absolutely refused to buy you one."

"So he did. This is my last summer's bathing suit with a little fur trimming around the edges."

Edith—That Mr. Phan is conversational! Impossible.

Ethel—Why so?

Edith—We were talking about the theater and when I inquired what was his favorite play he said it he had any favorite it was calling a man steal second.

Martin Littleton tells a story of two Englishmen whom he met while crossing from Europe. The Englishmen were both of a serious and conservative turn of mind. Although they shared the same staircase, had seats at the same table, and sat side by side in their deck chairs, they did not speak to each other, considering it improper to do so, as they had not been introduced.

On the last day, when New York was near at hand, one of them decided it was time to waive conventionality and make the acquaintance of his fellow-countryman.

They were standing side by side on the yacht. The man with the initiative was lost in thought. Finally, when he had decided upon a timely introductory remark, he said:

"Goin' over?"

"Yes," replied the other Englishman, "I rather thought I would. Are you?"

"Goin' over?"

How To Handle Your Replies

Before you insert an advertisement of this kind, be sure that you have everything ready. A theatrical promoter does not advertise a show before he has the actors, the scenery, and other requisites, and has gone through the rehearsal.

Heart and Home Problems

by MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON

SWEATER SET FOR THE OUTDOOR GIRL

man credulity. Warts come and go, uninvited and untreated, and if you happen to cross your fingers a few weeks before the going of a wart you have discovered a new cure. Milkweed would no doubt have a similar influence upon pneumonia, typhoid fever, sour stomach or a boil on the neck. People seem to think there must be some cure for everything, why does no one market the infallible Essence of Milkweed for Warts, Mieseries, Coughs, Colds and Utarnah?

Method in Our Madness.

When I first began to read your articles, writes Mrs. S. H. G., I was inclined to think you were mean, cranky, unfeeling, insincere. Now I never miss anything you have to say. Take it as a compliment from a number of two doctors and a mother of a good surgeon that Health Talks have a respected hearing in our home. I think that your humor and satirical and delightful style combine to make one's ills lighter—and that means much.

Answer—If we laugh we laugh with the wisest. The world is dull enough. One may find amusement and humor even in an attack of appendicitis.

Vaccine for Whooping-Cough.

One two older children have whooping-cough and the two younger ones have been exposed. Will you please explain what you deem the best mode of treatment?

Answer—Have the doctor administer the whooping-cough vaccine abroad, both as treatment and as preventive, and keep the children outdoors as much as possible, and make them abdominal heat with an insertion of elastic webbing for support.

Perspiring Feet.

What is the best local application for perspiring feet?

Answer—A solution of salicylic acid (one ounce) in alcohol (half pint)—apply once daily.

Household Hints

By WILLIAM BRADY, M. D.

THE IDEAL SCHOOL LUNCH.

What would be the ideal lunch for a child of six to fifteen years of age to carry to school?

Half a pint of certified or otherwise insured milk in a vacuum bottle in the warmer season. Two thin slices of well-baked, preferably home-baked bread, spread with a thick coating of butter and generously topped with sugar, preferably granulated. The two slices may be clapped together and wrapped in some waxed paper. A banana or an orange, an apple, a banana or any fresh fruit in season.

Every other day the child might enjoy some cold meat, perhaps two small sandwiches, a salad of lettuce, chicken, mutton or bacon, if meat and butter and sugar. If meat and bread are carried, there is no need for the cold meat or salad. To go better with meat. Of course, a child under twelve should have any tea or coffee or cocoa, and it isn't necessary for any school child to carry these stimulants to school. On days when meat and bread are not, a slice of bread and butter and sugar, something in the way of sweets may be carried to the teacher. A couple of small sugar cookies, a slice of home-baked cake—no bakery stuff—or perhaps a stick of pure candy, are the only cheap candy that is fit to eat.

Ple. ham, tea, coffee, cocoa, nudines, sausage, any other thin home-stuffed meat or home-baked bread-stuff, will have no place in the school-child's lunch.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

The Milkweed Again.

J. F. C. B. and A. P. C. have written me asking for a recipe of milkweed as a cure for warts. I applied the juice to the warts for a number of many days on end. The warts disappeared in a week later.

Answer.—A fair illustration.

SIMPLE HOME REMEDY.

SIMPLE HOME REMEDY.
This cough cure is worth its weight in gold. The herbs can be purchased at drug stores. One package horehound, one package comfrey root, one package mullein. Take half of each one and steep in a pint (or a little more) of water (put on cold water). Steep well and strain. Add to the half pint of thick syrup made of brown sugar and lemon juice and it is ready for use. It is excellent. Take half teaspoonful every half hour till cough is relieved.

THINGS WORTH KNOWING.

When kitchen soap becomes thin, stick it onto another bar and it will then be thicker. A part of it thus will be used up without creating the annoying small particles, which are such a nuisance.

In hearing embroidered scallops, it is better to use cotton thread than embroidery floss. The work will be much easier.

Blankets may be readily washed by fastening the bathrub or any large laundry tub, when washing machine is not available. Make a strong soapy solution and pour over blankets, then use a brush to scrub them. The water may be changed several times. Then wash with water up and down with vigorous push. This creates a suction and the dirt is easily drawn out.

Outing Flannel Slippers—To keep

NEW YEAR'S RESOLVES FOR MARRIED FOLKS.

Never to indulge in the habit of self-pity. Self-pity is akin to self-love and quite as dangerous to family happiness.

To remember to say the kind and gracious little things that make the day brighter and the heart warmer at so little cost of effort.

To cultivate the ability to put yourself in his or her place. Most quarrels are only misunderstandings, not fundamental disagreements.

Don't Speak Disparagingly Of Each Other's Kin.

Never to speak disparagingly of another's kin. A son may see his mother's faults but if he is a good son, and if he isn't he won't be a good son, he will keep his tongue shut. A father will keep his tongue shut if he knows that his son is from discussing them and that the results are injurious to his wife.

Not to go about with a chip on one's shoulder and to hunt for and cherish little grievances.

person I have to make good, myself; my duty to my neighbor is much more nearly expressed by saying I have to make him happy, if I can."

Don't Love By Weight And Measure.

To keep away from the habit of measuring all the love and service that you give and being afraid you won't get a fair return. To love by weight by weight and measure ever gets the best out of life.

And to insist to have this ideal of the beloved R. "Love your heart and to turn to it in every dark day and hour of discouragement: "for the love of married people continually spur up each other, higher and higher, to do better and to meet and love each other on a higher ground. And ever because the failures there will come, the more the ideal virtues of courage and console."

The FREE Sewing Machine

(Invented and patented by W. C. Free)

Because—

The FREE runs lighter for tired limbs,
The FREE sews faster for aching backs,
The FREE is noiseless for exhausted nerves,
The FREE makes a perfect stitch for weak eyes,
The FREE is more beautiful for artistic homes,
The FREE will give you a life-time of service.

Two wonderful improvements make this machine superior to all others.—The Rotoscillo Movement causing The FREE to run as light as a feather, and the Toggle Link Movement which removes all noise and friction. You cannot afford either for your health or money to use your old machine any more than you can afford to cook in a fire place or travel in a covered wagon.

The FREE is absolutely guaranteed for life. We don't have to put a time limit on our guarantee, because we know The FREE is built to last a lifetime.

atoes cut into cubes. Salt and pepper to taste. Dumplings:—One large cup flour, one teaspoon baking powder, a little salt. Make a stiff dough, adding a little water. Drop in small spoonfuls on top of meat and vegetables. Simmer twenty minutes. Keep fire light on kettle. If gravy is too thick, water done, add a little thickening. Baste with your supper is done in one-half hour.

Fig and Cheese Relish—Make small incisions in as many figs as you desire. Fill with cream cheese moistened with a little sweet cream. Serve with crackers and coffee at end of a dinner.

Muffins—Put one egg and one teaspoon of salt and sugar into a mixing bowl. Beat lightly. Add one cup milk or water. Add a little salt with two teaspoons of baking powder. Use enough flour to make consistency of cake dough. Bake in quick oven. If more liquid is added, this makes delicious rolls.

Steamed Pudding—Put one tablespoon of preserves or jam in the bottom of one quart gem pan. Make a batter of one egg, six cups sugar, one cup sifted flour, butter, six cups milk, one of egg beaten, one-half cup yolks of egg beaten stiff and folded in last; pinch of salt. Bake in gem pan.

Mushroom Cream—Candies.

Peel and chop a few mushrooms, season and stew with a little butter and seasoning till tender enough to pulp. Chop up a little cooked chicken or veal, mix with mushrooms. Pound together and run through a chopper or sieve. Add small quantity thick cream or beaten butter. Season to taste with salt and paprika. Place between slices of brown bread.

TO THE HEALTH OF YOUR HAIR

MAY it ever be free from the contagion of dandruff, and possessed of that scintillating beauty and luxuriance, imparted by the intelligent use of the delightfully fragrant and exquisite hair dressing.

Newbro's Herpicide

Every woman should have beautiful and attractive hair, for Nature lavishly rewards those who labor rationally to preserve and beautify it. Is your hair oily or sticky? Is it dull or lusterless? Have you dandruff? So, you should use Newbro's Herpicide at once. It eradicates dandruff contagion, after which the hair will grow as Nature intended. This does not apply to chronic baldness which is incurable. Herpicide keeps itching of the scalp almost instantly and gives the average of its value from the very first application. It contains no oil or grease and is unsurpassed for its cleanliness. This exclusive scalp prophylactic makes the hair light and fluffy and greatly adds to its attractiveness. This exclusive

SAVES UNCLE SAM MILLIONS IN JUNK

William Jacobus.

Up to the time that William Jacobus, the scrap metal expert, stepped into the limelight by showing how Uncle Sam could save millions on the scrap usually sold as junk very few people, if any, knew that one could specialize on junk and become an expert in this line. Mr. Jacobus has taught the navy department alone how to save $2,000,000 a year.

EXPECT ANOTHER GERMAN WILL BE MADE AGAINST ALLIES ON WESTERN FRONT

[BY ASSOCIATED PRESS.] London, Jan. 8.—The comparative quiet which has reigned on the western front ever since the British offensive of September is soon to be broken, according to the prophecies of all military experts, by an elaborate German offensive along the whole front. All reports from Belgium concur in announcing that the German attack is being planned for late in January. During the past few days long convoys of munitions have been pouring toward the advanced German positions in Flanders, and fresh arrivals of troops from the eastern front are constantly recorded.

A correspondent at the British front states that the preliminaries for the great offensive are already under way, and that a noticeable change has come over the whole front. Heavy German guns are again in action, and there is a distinct difference in the character of the German troops which are manning the front trenches. Instead of the new recruits which have been stationed for some time in these positions, veteran soldiers from Poland have now appeared and have made their presence known by creeping up to the barbed wire entanglements of the British where they left a placard in English which read: "We have come back from Warsaw to give you Hell!"

There can constantly be heard from behind the German lines the rumbling of trains bringing up men and munitions, the rumble of heavy artillery and the tramping of constantly arriving battalions.

FORTY YEARS AGO

The Janesville Daily Gazette, Jan. 8.—About half the population of Rock county turned out and visited Janesville today, which was a very proper thing to do.

The committee on claims of the county board of supervisors has been in session since Thursday, and having finished their business adjourned today. The board will meet next Tuesday.

Rock county can furnish the largest lady's foot in the state. The other day an unmarried woman about twenty years old called at the shoe store of S. O. P. O. and wanted a pair of wool lined buckle shoes. She attempted to try on a pair of No. 33, men size, but found they were too small. Being the largest size Mr. Smith had in the store she was compelled to search elsewhere. The man engaged to this young lady should wait until the tariff is taken off leather before he takes her feet into himself.

Mr. F. F. Ford is in the city calling on old friends and relatives.

This project can be made from any wood having an even grain, free from knots. For the shelves and side pieces 3/4-inch thick will be suitable. The 1/2-inch thick. First shape up the two sides A and B. Make the shelves top one 8 inches wide and the lower one 10 inches wide. Fasten the shelves and sides together by screws as shown in the drawings. Before doing this make a little design in each side piece like the one shown as F. This is made by boring four holes with an auger bit. Fasten the back E on with either nails or screws, and then bore three or four small screw holes in E for fastening the rack to the wall. Sandpaper, stain, and wax or shellac.

MR. PERKY'S DISCOVERY

By J. C. PLUMMER.

(Copyright.)

It was after midnight that a boat deposited Captain Hilde on his schooner, the Dolphin, loaded and ready to sail for Portland. Coming from the darkness into the lighted cabin, caused the captain to blink awfully at his mate and a stranger.

"This is Mr. Perky," said the mate, "he's going with us to Portland as a passenger."

"Ay, ay," responded the skipper, shaking affectionately the hand of Mr. Perky, "take the port stateroom, my lad."

"You see, captain," said Mr. Perky, "I'm leaving Baltimore kind of sudden because I'm afraid I might be taken back."

Captain Hilde became interested. "Police matter?" he asked.

"No, it isn't," replied Mr. Perky, "with decision, I've been hearing from the widow Manship and she's made up her mind that I am to marry her. Now, I don't want to marry her nor any other woman and I won't."

"If you keep under hatches," remarked the mate, "you'll be all safe."

The Dolphin was two days getting down to Hampton roads and then a boat put off from ashore and hailed her.

A tall, bony woman scaled the ladder easily and walked to the quarter-deck.

"Is this your schooner the Dolphin?" she asked.

"Yes, mum," replied the mate.

"Then tell Mr. Perky to get ready to go ashore with me."

"You are Mrs. Manship?" inquired the mate.

"I am," replied the lady. "Tell Mr. Perky to hurry and hurry a little yourself."

The mate called down into the cabin, where the skipper and Mr. Perky were eating breakfast, that Mrs. Manship had come for him.

"I can't let Mr. Perky go," said the skipper to Mrs. Manship. "I've obligated myself to deliver him at Portland, and to Portland he goes."

"Well," remarked Mrs. Manship, "of course if I wanted him to go ashore I'd take him, but I kind of like the sea. My first husband was a sailor and was lost. I haven't heard from him for five years. I'll go to Portland, too. Make out your bill for the passage money."

Then she called down the cabin stairs, "Come up, Hiram."

Mr. Perky emerged slowly and was at once embraced by Mrs. Manship.

"Poor, shy boy," she said, "he's so shy, captain, and the poor fellow can't keep his buttons on. His clothes would drop off him if it wasn't for me."

The next morning Mr. Perky asked the captain to give him a job.

"I haven't any job to give you," said the skipper. "You're a passenger and we're fully manned."

"I want to sit on those cross sticks and try to discover something," insisted Mr. Perky, pointing to the cross-sticks.

"What would you discover?" asked the skipper.

"Oh, wrecks, rocks or icebergs," said Mr. Perky.

With the consent of the skipper Mr. Perky climbed up to the cross-sticks and sat down.

Manship seemed surprised at Mr. Perky's suggestion, but contented herself with sitting on the hatch and watching him.

"That Mr. Perky believed that he had discovered something. It looked like a wreck," said the skipper.

"It is a man, diving to a plank," said the skipper.

The skipper was put about and his mate was rescued. Curiosity brought Mrs. Manship from the hatch and she glanced at the rescued man, then she screamed.

"My long lost Ezra. I've mourned you for dead," as she embraced the castaway.

Mr. Perky now descended from his perch and joined them.

"That's the man who discovered you," said the skipper, pointing to Mr. Perky.

Mr. Manship promptly disengaged himself from his wife's embrace and looked Mr. Perky down.

"That'll teach you to discover things," he growled.

"It's all right," said Mr. Perky, "I'm all right, and I know how you feel."

DAILY NOTES

Safety first is the best policy in handling the dairy bull.

When you build a barn see that it is comfortable and sanitary.

Every cow in the herd should be better-broken. Begin while they are calves.

If you haven't one, there is still time to put up a silo for this winter's feeding.

The calf should be given five licks of hay when young to encourage its appetite.

To have a calf that will mature into a valuable individual give it proper care from the start.

In any but a round silo the silage does not settle well, and even settling in what makes quality in silage.

Scours is far too common a malady with young calves and if not checked the outcome may be disastrous.

War Has But Little Effect Upon The Beauty of Fancy

Washington, D. C., Jan. 8.—With a mood for every fancy and a character for every need, France, at the beginning of the war, was the favored land for travelers; for there was not only a reveler's Paris, but a social and learned Paris, a France of eternal artists, a France of eternal springtime while the automobilists, the French boundaries, within the French boundaries, the physical beauty of the country and the richness and variety of the charms that it has to offer are told by Arthur Stanley Riggs in a bulletin just issued by the National Geographic Society. The bulletin reads:

"It might fairly be said that the general impression France, as a whole, leaves upon the beholder is green. Perpetual moist of climate—except in the south—endowed with heavy and continuous rainfalls, and having a temperature which is astonishingly even, year in and year out, the country is like an enormous hot-house. The result is a study in green of every conceivable and inconceivable shade. Verdure and foliage range from green that are gray or black to green that are hardly more than yellow. From the hardy pastures high upon the sides of the towering Pel-vous range, thousands of feet above the sea, to the cactus and agaves and olives that grow at the water's edge, the verdant nuances are a revelation in rural coloring.

"But France is not all green, either. That is only the background, the filler, as it were, for a warm-toned picture full of highlights, touched with the gold of grain, the ruddy tiles of ancient roofs, the fiery spatter of poppies, the lawny flood of a river or the steely thread of a brook, and on the glittering southern shore, with cliffs as high as any soil New Jersey boasts, water like melted sapphires, villas covered with majolica tiles that make the beholder rub his eyes and wonder if he is dreaming the amazing intricacies of style and color that strive to but cannot shatter the harmony of creation.

"Almost every one of the older divisions of the country has some feature distinctly its own that fixes it indelibly in mind. Brittany is always the 'Land of Pardons,' a bleak, windswept peninsula full of silent, undemonstrative folk who live by the harvest of the sea. Dauphine, whose Alps seem asleep. The whole rich and snowy teeth, burns with glorious sunsets that fire its savage grandeur; Burgundy, of the wine; Champagne of the 'liquid sunshine.' Auvergne, of the dead volcanoes, like giant beehives, and Touraine, that was and still is the playground of France, and all characteristic and easily remembered.

"No less so is Normandy, with its shimmering streams and its wide-spread orchards of cider apples—acres and clouds of pink and white and green in the tender spring—the air quick with the thin, sweet, subtle fragrance. And spring is not only 'apple-blossom' time in Normandy. By every turn, about the railroad stations, along the roads, and in private estates, brightly hedges of scented haws vie with the and the white clusters of great chestnuts, the long festoons of the towering acacias, and other flowers innumerable.

"The real Brittany is an open, wind-thrashed, compelling country of gray and green, a hardy province able to withstand the buffeting of the sea and its gales, inhabited by a race who fear only God and the sea, but man not at all. They live in and by the sea—and the sea by them. Their clouds of blue nets hang high in the sun from gleaming brown masts and yards in the harbor of Douarnenez, the symbol of their victories. And in the nave of many a little church throughout Brittany the sea has her symbol—a waiting catafalque.

"Poitou is a comely province, of soft and delicate coloring, tender azure skies, unburied streams that 'moving, seem asleep.' The whole rich and fertile region is a tone-harmony, full of subtle shades of color. Among the furrows great oxen toil with 'beets' hounds and patient eyes—the 'beets' the peasant often values more than his easily replaced wife. They plow, they reap; they haul heavy burdens along the endless white roads. They even brighten up the unutterable dinginess of railway yards, as they pad softly back and forth, shunting freight cars.

"Languedoc, the land of oo, with its green canals and turbid river Tarn, is a lovely district, where geography has influenced both people and architecture, from Roman times to the present day; a land of great cities and vast wild expanses of wilderness and goblin fascination. Toulouse, the greatest city of the Midi and the embodiment of its history, is a living testimony to geographical influences. Palaces, houses, donjon library, and churches are built solidly of brick.

"It is difficult to say what is the most beautiful section of France. The most vivid and ravishing is the Cote d'Azur, that 'Blue Side' we call the Riviera. All the way from Marseille to Vintimiglia, at the Italian frontier, it is an endless floral paradise. Geographically it is a narrow littoral, protected from the fierce north winds by considerable hills beyond, and consequently a forcing house for every flower that blows. The rugged coast ranges from the sea to the foot of Cannes to the iron cliffs at the border, and the colors from one end of the spectrum to the other. It is a blue shore—aye, an emerald, and red, and black, and brown, and gray."

MINISTER TO CHINA IS ELECTED PRESIDENT OF IMPORTANT ASSOCIATION

[BY ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

Peking, Jan. 8.—Dr. Paul S. Reinsch, American minister to China, was elected first vice-president of the Chinese Social and Political Science Association which was formally organized at a meeting held in the foreign office and attended chiefly by Chinese and American officials and scholars.

The president of the new association is Lu Ching-shiang, the Chinese minister of foreign affairs. Tsao Ju-lin, vice-minister of foreign affairs, is the secretary to the new organization, and Wu Chao-shu, counselor for the foreign office and the son of Dr. Wu, the former minister for China to the United States, was made treasurer.

Among the members of the executive council are Dr. W. P. Willoughby, legal adviser of the Chinese government, who was formerly treasurer of Porto Rico, and Ronald Massey, counselor of the British legation. Dr. Reinsch and Wellington Koo, the present Chinese minister to Washington, first suggested the association and initiated the plans which resulted yesterday in the formal organization. Dr. Y. T. Tsai and all the members of the faculty of the Tsing Hua college, which is supported chiefly through American boxer indemnity money which the American government re-funds to China, are active members.

Dr. Henry C. Adams of the University of Michigan, who is temporarily in China reorganizing the system of accounting for Chinese railways, has also assisted in organizing the association.

Dr. Reinsch was the chief speaker at yesterday's meeting, and outlined the plans of the association, which he believes will result in much benefit to the Chinese government through a scientific study of law, politics, sociology, economics and administration in China. The association will publish a magazine in which the original work of members will appear. Dr. Reinsch predicted that this magazine in English will do much to familiarize the world with China's internal problems, and result in a general interchange of ideas, which will be beneficial to Chinese political systems.

A NEW DANGER TO AUTO-

There is no Room in the World for the Man who only Guesses -- YOU MUST KNOW.

MEN who work with their hands and muscles are struggling at a big disadvantage. The world doesn't care so much how much you can lift while 'on the job'—it is how much do you know?

Suppose a man should pop around the corner and say to you, "who is the representative from your district?" Could you answer him?

You may be as poor as a church-mouse in money but rich in knowledge. You may be able to answer a fund of inquiries—you may be looked upon as a wise man of your neighborhood, and if that is so then you are also rich in a number of real friends.

The man who knows is welcomed everywhere—he attracts people to him—folks like to have dealings with the intelligent man—

Are You that Man?

For instance: what do you know about the Republic of Mexico—its agriculture—area—and population—capital—commerce—debt—education—finance—government—judicature—history—language—its mines and minerals—its monetary system—its production and industry—its towns—states—capitals—weights—measures—currency?

Can you give facts about this one question (alone) of the day? Can you converse intelligently about Mexico's present and past difficulties?

Can you give the important facts about your own state or any other state in the Union? Have you reliable books that will give such information?

Can you refer to any books in your library and know the world's production in hops—fire insurance statistics—fire losses—in these United States?

Do they give you facts in general about the earth?

To put it in another way—what do you know about

Electrical Measures;
Number of Evangelists;
Expenditure of U. S.
Farm statistics.
Farmers table;
Ice yachting records;

Number of Jacobites;
Number of people in any given religious sect?
Horse power developed in U. S.
Horse racing records;
Mercantile Marine
Eight hour laws?

Where is Devil's Tower—Red River—Muscat—Montezuma Castle—Muir Woods?

What mountains are the highest—or rivers the longest—or lakes the widest—or national monuments the tallest?

Who are the representatives—what are the retail prices of foods—the U. S. Postal Laws?

What are the President's powers—what is his constitutional position—how is he elected—his residence and rules and salary?

These are but a few of the subjects covered in

The Gazette Almanac and Encyclopedia
